Often centering her paintings around a single object, Rosen began this five-part painting with a floral scarf that belonged to her grandmother. The work is created in the palette Rosen has taken inspiration from since her grandmother, a craft painter, left her a set of paints when she died. The swirling, figurative scene is made up of paint, caulking, and canvas, though also skillfully incorporates clay, twine, and a variety of unexpected objects and materials—two bamboo shades, a placemat, and a broken ceramic cup among them.
